Die folgende Arbeitsbibliographie entstand im Kontext eines Seminars zu den Filmen Altmans. Sie versteht sich als eine erste Durchsicht des Materials und soll fortgeschrieben werden. Die Oscar-Verleihung im März 2006 wird auch das akademische Interesse an Altmans Filmen beleben – insbesondere für diesen Kontext versteht sich die folgende Sammlung. Wir bitten, uns Ergänzungen und Korrekturen, Abstracts und Hinweise auf Mehrfachabdrucke zuzusenden, wir werden sie in die Bibliographie einfügen und sie gelegentlich in erweiterter Fassung online zugänglich machen.

The critical and public reaction to Robert Altman's new film, 'Gosford Park,' indicates that the venerated director may have a large commercial hit on his hands. At Elaine's restaurant in New York, Altman reflects on his career and what his films mean to him.

In Robert Altman's Subliminal Reality, Robert T. Self sheds light on Altman's work and provides the most comprehensive analysis of his films to date. With close readings of classics like MASH, McCabe and Mrs. Miller, and Nashville, as well as more recent films like The Player, Short Cuts, and Cookie's Fortune, Self asserts the value of Altman's work not only to film theory and the entertainment industry but to American culture itself. In his analysis, Self identifies Altman's films particularly as they address issues of form, identity, and industry. He explains how Altman critiques moviemaking forms by using an open, fragmented mode of storytelling and by turning conventional Hollywood genres inside out. He examines Altman's characterization of social and individual identity as fragile and fragmentary and his depiction of antiheroic characters debilitated by their socially constructed gender roles. Finally, Self shows how Altman challenges the entertainment industry itself, questioning its methods and motives and critiquing its role in our cultural alienation. Self frames his study of Altman's work with a discussion of the director's efforts to create a "subliminal reality" in his narratives-to touch audiences on an unconscious level and to recognize the unspoken, and unspeakable, dimensions in human interactions. According to Self, this striving for "subliminal reality" makes Altman's films not only exemplary of the potential of art cinema narration but instrumental in keeping such narrative alive.

 Southerners in Robert Altman's films, *M*A*S*H*, Brewster McCloud, Thieves Like Us, and Nashville, represent a cross section of American lifestyles and attitudes. The people of the South are proud, resilient, and forceful but are also prone to racial and regional biases, stubbornness, and greed. Altman finds and pictures the South as the locus of conservatism in the United States.

 "Robert Altman" is the name of the author metonymic with the variety of productive forces that intersect and disperse across the set of two dozen films bearing that name. It signifies numerous modes of discourse – technological, industrial, societal, formal, psychological, academic – each of which authorizes a different "notional coherence" in the reading of these films.

"Robert Altman raises questions on how history is created and historical figures become legends in his film 'Buffalo Bill and the Indians, or Sitting Bull's History Lesson.' The film repeatedly draws attention to its fictional character by references to the genre form and to Buffalo Bill's acts of self-promotion as a means of creating a myth at a time when the real western frontier was already regarded as history. It also questions the significance of film narrative in historiography by destroying the viewer's sense of causality.

Robert Altman gambles on the artist vision of himself and the director every time he produces a film. Unlike most American producers, he weighs the artistic merit more than potential profits. His most recent production in 'Mrs. Parker and the Vicious Circle.'

American studies has evolved from its exclusively historical focus to an effort at interpreting and reconstructing history and current phenomena into a coherent view of the American culture. An example of the shift in focus in American studies is the Agrarian movement originating in Nashville, TN, that advocated a return to pre-industrial society as a reaction to the supposed emptiness of modern industrial culture. Nashville also becomes a subject of studies on student activists in the 1960s who worked towards equal educational opportunities for blacks, a movement that became the subject of a film by Robert Altman.

Rush, Jeffrey S.: "Who's in on the joke: parody as hybridized narrative discourse." (Film Parody) In: Quarterly Review of Film and Video, 12, 1-2, May 1990, p. 5(8).

Robert Altman's movie 'Nashville' and Wim Wenders' movie 'The American Friend' illustrate the differences between hybrid and simple parody. Hybridized parody goes beyond simple parody in that the very discourse itself is also a subject of parody. 'Nashville' is an example of simple parody, whereas 'The American Friend' is an example of hybrid parody." [Expanded Academic Index]

Andersen, Kurt: "A player once again." (movie director Robert Altman) In: Time, 139, 16, April 20, 1992, p. 78(3) (2166 words).

Altman's new movie, 'The Player,' may spark a comeback for the 67-year-old director, who has had a career marked by success and failure. 'The Player' is a dark comedy about the movie business, and it has been well-received at private screenings.

Ansen, David.: "The player." (review) In: Newsweek, 119, 15, April 13, 1992, p. 68(1).

Ansen, David: "The Player." (director Robert Altman's new film) (Hollywood Is Talking)(motion picture industry) In: Newsweek, 119, 9, March 2, 1992, p. 61(2).

"The hottest movie making the rounds in Hollywood is a satire on the motion picture industry itself, 'The Player.' The film is the work of Robert Altman, who has been ignored by the industry for years because of his reputation for being difficult and because his films were deemed too uncommercial.

Sugg, Richard P.: "The Role of the Writer in The Player: Novel and Film." Literature/Film Quarterly, 22, 1, 1994, pp. 11-15.

"The movie version of the 'The Player' portrays a different role for the writer than that portrayed in the novel. The story concerns a movie executive's conflict with screenwriters he rejects, his killing one of them and remaining threatened by another. Robert Altman's movie portrays the writer as an active agent who is surpassed by the power of the moviemaker. The novel portrayed writers as passive victims who could surpass the moviemaker in the long run." [Expanded Academic Index]

 Robert Altman's film presents a flawed portrayal of the Paris fashion industry. Altman placed too much emphasis on the personalities of models and designers and their effect on popular culture. The movie revolves around the lives of several fictional designers whose characters were based on real designers. The film has been criticized for its insistence on viewing the fashion world as having an influential role in society, a view that has been outmoded since the late 1950s." [Expanded Academic Index]

The translation of Raymond Carver's story 'Short Cuts' into a film is discussed. Director Robert Altman's ambivalent feelings about Carver are assessed.

Altman has recently completed 'Short Cuts,' based on nine short stories and a poem by the late Ray Carver. Carver's widow Tess Gallagher believes Altman translated Carver's work very truthfully while injecting enough energy for the movies.

"Robert Altman's film 'Short Cuts' is based on Raymond Carver's writings. Without resorting to melodrama, Altman effectively captured the abstractions in little acts and objects in much the same way as Carver did. Altman and scriptwriter Frank Barhydt were also able to expand on Carver's meanings without resorting to ironies or comments.

"Robert Altman's film 'Short Cuts' uses an operational password 'lemonade,' to form the film's theme and structural principle. The intermingling of the films's characters during an urban catastrophe unites them in an erratic sequence of events. The film focuses on the uncertainties of life, in part illustrated by Jack Lemmon's search for his missing son only to discover his grandson in a hospital casualty ward. Altman portrays the chance meetings of these people in a comic albeit sensitive manner.

The Raymond Carver short stories Robert Altman used as the basis for his film 'Short Cuts' pursue similar visions in different ways. Carver presented a quiet simplicity on the surface with strong undercurrents of emotion, while Altman preferred a faster pace that did not engage the audience deeply. Carver often ended the story before its narrative was resolved, but Altman recast the stories into overlapping conclusions.
